DEATH.

On the 4th May, at Sea, the infant son of Captain JOHN HAMILTON.

The delivery of the Daily Press from this office commenced on Monday morning at 10.15, and the last messengers left the office at 10.40.

The Daily Press.

HONGKONG, MAY 26TH, 1868.

No one can now complain of having insufficient data for the formation of an opinion in reference to the great fire brigade negotiations of last year. The difficulty, as Mr. KESWICK says, was evidently that old difficulty, "who shall be greatest?" If, as the Governor concisely puts the case, the volunteers wanted to command the General, it is not altogether surprising that it was found impossible to make arrangements for the formation of the brigade last year. However, we can hardly believe that the majority of the volunteers, or, rather, the majority of those persons who would be willing to become volunteers in the event of a brigade being formed under satisfactory conditions,—would advance any absurd pretension of this kind. A consideration of the whole game at cross purposes, revealed by the debate in the Council on Friday, leads to the idea that a good deal of mischief would have been avoided if the representatives of the Insurance Offices had not assumed the authority, to which they had no claim, of speaking on behalf of the community. The report of their committee scarcely pretends to be more than a report that all attempts to form a volunteer brigade have broken down. If all persons willing to become members of a volunteer brigade, in the event of satisfactory arrangements being made, had assembled in the first instance, and appointed a committee to confer with the Government, it is difficult to believe that the attempt would have failed as it did,—failing doubly, by leaving the Governor disgusted at the extravagant claims made on behalf of the volunteers and the public at large, under the impression that the noble enthusiasm of possible volunteers had been strangled with red tape. How the representatives of the Insurance Offices can venture to say now that they spoke on behalf of the community, is beyond our comprehension. They actually carried on their proceedings with closed doors, and refused to allow a public report of what took place, an arrangement which was illiberal in any case, but which renders the claim which is now made on behalf of that meeting something much worse.

It was commonly said at the time this matter was being talked of last year,—a little plain speaking may be useful now,—that the Governor proposed to place Mr. RENNIE at the head of the brigade, while most of the people likely to become volunteers, wanted to have Mr. OLMSTED for their chief. Mr. RENNIE, if this story was true, was evidently an attempt to reconcile the difficult question of authority. He was clearly to have been a link between the volunteers and the Government. But volunteers must have a volunteer chief. So far we fully agree with the feeling which Mr. KESWICK expressed at the Council, and we certainly never heard anyone suggested who combined physical qualifications, special experience, and interest in the contemplated undertaking in so remarkable a degree as Mr. OLMSTED. If that gentleman was considered ineligible on the ground that he was not at the head of any mercantile establishment, the objection seems to us irrational. But neither he nor any one else whom the volunteers would have accepted could possibly have claimed to exercise any kind of authority over the police, or a fortiori the military. If any such claim was advanced, it must have been advanced without proper authority, by people who had no right to speak in the name of the possible volunteers.

The broad deduction from what has been revealed is, that considering the peculiarities of Hongkong, a Government brigade has a better chance of success than one under a volunteer organisation. The moment of a great fire would not be a favourable opportunity for a dispute concerning the limits of authority between a volunteer officer and an officer of the police or the garrison. Unless a volunteer fire brigade is imbued with a hearty sympathy, and even a certain respect, for the regular forces with which it will have to co-operate, it is likely to do more harm than good. The public service is one in which there is only one way of purchasing authority, namely, by submission to some other and higher authority. In any case the volunteer superintendent of a fire brigade who wants to be useful, as well as ornamental, must not begin by wanting to grasp the ornamental attributes of power, while remaining altogether irresponsible himself.

A mistake was made in the Gazette of Saturday, which proclaimed the new Stamp Ordinance for that day. By a Supplementary Gazette the error was corrected, and the Ordinance proclaimed for 1st July.

The Band of the 73rd.

The Band of the 73rd Regiment will perform in the Public Gardens to-day, the 26th inst., commencing at 5 o'clock P.M., the following programme:—

Overture	Barber of Seville	Rossini.
Quadrille	Carnicale	Kühner.
Selection	Martha	Flotow.
Valse	Morgenblätter	Strauss.
Galop	Sturmvogel	Faust.

M. TROY, Conductor.

Her Majesty's Birthday.

Yesterday being the day appointed for the celebration of the Queen's birthday, the men-of-war and merchant vessels in the Harbour were gaily decked out with flags. A salute of twenty-one guns was also fired at 12 o'clock as arranged, but unfortunately the review of the troops, which it was intended should take place on the Parade-ground in the evening, was postponed in consequence of the rain, which fell very heavily from two o'clock until dark. About half-past four the bugle announced in the Murray Barracks that there would be no parade, nevertheless the Police, in strong force, were marched to the ground led by Mr. Deane and his assistants, for the purpose of keeping the ground. On arrival they found that their services would not be required, so a return to barracks was ordered.

The Legislative Council.

Present:
H.E. The GOVERNOR.
The CHIEF-JUSTICE.
The COLONIAL-SECRETARY.
The ACTING ATTORNEY-GENERAL.
The AUDITOR-GENERAL.
The ACTING COLONIAL-TREASURER.
Hon. P. RYRIE.
Hon. W. KESWICK.
Hon. J. P. DUNCANSON.

The Council met, according to appointment, on Saturday, at 1 p.m.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

The GOVERNOR said he would like the Auditor-General to repeat the explanation he had partly given before as to the nature of these estimates.

The AUDITOR-GENERAL explained that the colony was not spending the amount of the supplementary estimates in addition to the expenditure, which had been estimated for the year in the first instance. On the contrary the actual expenditure of the Government was under that amount. But the transfer of amounts from one item to another rendered the present votes necessary as a formality. Thus $26,000 had been voted under special expenses for a gunboat, but the scheme under which this estimate was made had broken down, and the present votes were required to sanction the use which had been made of that money, the purchase of the John Adam for the police, and of the powder hulk.

The GOVERNOR observed that the expenditure on the powder hulk was reproductive.

The CHIEF-JUSTICE asked whether the Government did not insure the powder magazine.

The GOVERNOR explained that the Government never insured its own property.

THE GAMBLING HOUSES.

Mr. KESWICK wished to know if he should be in order in asking His Excellency whether anything could be stated in reference to the money received under the gambling ordinance.

The GOVERNOR said that properly speaking notice ought to have been given of a such a question. It was rather a difficult one to answer. There was a great deal which might be said, and a great deal which it was important that the Council should know, but if he were to limit himself merely to correcting the misstatements which had been made in connexion with the subject, all the time which they had at their disposal for legislation would be taken up. He was quite ready, however, (but only with the permission of the Council, as it would be a departure from the usual routine) to answer Mr. Keswick's question. There had been no change whatever in the aspect of this matter. Nothing had been settled as to that particular point since the subject was first mooted. The original problem still remained unsolved, namely what to do with the money if it were taken, or how to achieve the results required if it should not be taken. He would like the Council to know how consistent the policy of the Executive had been in this matter from the first. [He sent for a volume of dispatches, and read some extracts from 1866 to 1868.] As far back as the 9th of May, 1867, he had said that if the Home Government could devise any simple method of relieving the police from the harrassing and demoralising duties of suppressing secret gambling-houses he would be glad to try it. He was far from saying that he had exhausted all the means which it would be possible to imagine, because he had tried all which he could think of himself. He went on, he said, in this dispatch to state that the Executive Council agreed with him in thinking that no other way remained, but that of enlisting the aid of Chinese on behalf of the objects which the Government had in view. Again, on the 29th May, he had argued that to expect the hearty co-operation of the Chinese, unless the amount charged for the licenses were sufficiently high to affect the profits of the licensees, by any fines for faults, either of omission or commission, would be impossible therefore any project for the issue of licenses without fees would ex necessitate rei fail to accomplish the main purpose of such licenses. From that day to this (and there were some earlier dispatches on the subject which he had not at hand just then), the opinions of the Government on this subject had been precisely the same. He could not give Mr. Keswick a better answer than was contained in a speech of his addressed to the Council in August last, in which he said, "whatever addition comes to your means from that source, can only be viewed as the accidental, and unsought result of a policy to which the Government is reluctantly driven in pursuit of an object of great public importance, and one which is entirely distinct from the acquisition of revenue." Then he had gone on to allude in this same speech to the imputation of interested motives on the part of the Government which were easily made, but which were without logical force till it could be shewn that the Government were justified in folding their arms, and doing nothing to repress acknowledged evils, and put down illegal nurseries of crime, or till it could be shewn that the Executive had a choice of any other experiment. If anyone could invent a means of breaking up the confederations of bad character, and getting rid of the incubus with which the government was now burdened, he would regard him as a great public benefactor. But no plan worth five minutes attention had hitherto been suggested. They must, moreover, remember that they were not dealing with any imaginary evil. He had long since furnished to the Secretary of State proof that, in 1865, although 45 illegal gambling haunts had been broken up in that year, from 1st January to 1st September, there nevertheless were 35 in existence at the latter date; whilst all of the latter were the haunts of the worst characters in the place, and were the places where most of the burglaries and crimes were planned. He would now venture to say that the experiment which had been tried had not been unsuccessful. His attention, from the first, had been directed,—as his earliest despatches would prove,—to the danger lest the houses should be frequented by clerks and servants and thus lead to losses, tempting people of that class to the commission of small robberies. He had instituted an inquiry, however, as to the number of petty larcenies which had taken place during several periods, and he found that the average number of cases during thirteen weeks of each year from 1865 to 1868, had been as follows:—In the period for 1865 there had been 78 convictions and 10 cases discharged; in 1866, 58 convictions and 17 cases discharged; in 1867, in thirteen weeks previous to September, when the gambling-houses were first opened, 66 convicted and 21 discharged, and in thirteen weeks subsequent to the inauguration of the present system, 67 convicted and 15 discharged. Immediately after the present houses were opened, he drew attention to the necessity of preventing servants from going to these places. The licensees exerted themselves to prevent this, and he allowed them to recoup themselves for some losses which they thus incurred by a proportionate reduction of the fees. The fees, indeed, had been reduced subsequently, until at the last payment they were at the rate of $14,500 a month, instead of $21,000, as at first. Well, the result of the efforts which the licensees made was that the figures, taking an average of thirteen weeks for this year, had come down to 40 cases in all, that is, to less than half what they had been for the same period during the previous three years. Including cases reported where the offenders had not been caught, the number was only 40 for the whole. There could be no record of course concerning the actual number of gamblers as compared with those of a former time, but it was only natural to infer that if there was a great diminution in the crime of larceny by servants, it was very unlikely that the loss of money by gaming could have increased. It had to be remember, moreover, in reference to the figures just quoted, that the police returns were much more accurately kept now than formerly, and that we might be sure all cases were recorded now, though this could by no means be said in reference to former years. Very few of the better, or any class of servants or Chinese clerks, could now obtain admittance to the gambling houses; to accomplish this the licensees no doubt incurred considerable loss, but the government was happily able to make it worth their while, in consequence of the present arrangement by which the amount of the monthly fees payable by the Licensees rise or fall in proportion to their exertions to carry out the objects of Government. They had now engaged a superior class of men to watch the players. The difficulty had been in the first instance to fix the license fees at such an amount that while it would leave the licensees profits worth having, it would render them seriously apprehensive of any additional fines which might be imposed by the Government. One difficulty however could not be got over, but this of course existed before the present system was introduced, just as much as now. There were always private clubs to which the better class of compradores, and those really charged with large sums of money could go for the purpose of gambling. At some of these houses large sums were lost, far larger than which were ever staked in the licensed houses. Some people might ask how it was now, that there should be any illegal gambling-houses left. That had puzzled himself at first, but the explanation appeared to be that while at the licensed houses the bank charged a commission of 7 per cent., the illegal houses held out the inducement of only charging 3 per cent. He would certainly not encourage gambling by making the licenses reduce their commission; moreover, no articles of jewelry could be staked at any of the legal houses, except the common Chinese gold rings, which, indeed, were not taken in pledge, but simply purchased for their weight as metal—the vendor staking money. Another reason why there were still some secret gambling houses was that a large class of persons, who were known to the police as notorious offenders, could not venture to frequent the licensed houses. In reference more immediately to Mr. Keswick's question, he must still inform the Council that none of the money received under the license could be considered available for public purposes. He would not deny that his reason told him that inasmuch as this money had really accrued accidentally, in consequence of a measure which was introduced solely for police purposes, it was unwise not to use it. Still he could not help a certain sympathy with those who cried out, however wildly, against the acquisition of a revenue from such a source as this, and the Council must not expect that he would exert himself personally to obtain the use of that money for the colony. Nevertheless that point was one of detail, and not of principle. If it were the only difficulty the money could be thrown into the sea, and the question be thus disembarrassed of this incidental difficulty. The amount charged which had already fallen to about $14,000 a month, he thought might eventually be reduced to $10,000. That sum might possibly be sufficient to secure the zealous co-operation on the part of the license holders essential to ensure fair profits, and render their establishments more efficient for police purposes. On the whole he was fully convinced that the system had diminished crime, while there was no room at all for doubt that it had increased the efficiency of the police, by ruining the chief element of corruption. That, moreover, was the opinion of the Chinese themselves. When he had lately received a number of respectable Chinese residents to confer with him as to the Kidnapping Ordinance, the subject of gambling had then arisen, and they all admitted the general diminution of crime, nevertheless some of them had declared themselves desirous that the recent legislation should be done away with. It was some time before he could reconcile this work with the admission they had previously made till, he found that they shrank from the responsibility thrown upon them by the Registration Ordinance, which compelled them to take care that the houses of which they were owners should not be converted into gambling houses or houses of ill-fame. He had told them that they certainly must not expect to see that arrangement modified in any case. These discursive remarks, however, the Governor said, had better come to an end, though the statement which he had been led by Mr. Keswick's question into making would probably be not without interest to the community.

The CHIEF JUSTICE asked what was the total amount of the sums which had accumulated under the gambling licenses.

The GOVERNOR said about $135,000.

Mr. RYRIE asked if the Governor thought it likely that the keepers of the houses fairly would exclude respectable persons.

The GOVERNOR thought that very likely persons of such respectability, as, for instance, the Chairman of the Chamber of Commerce, would be able to gain admittance, but the upper class of Chinese servants would certainly find it necessary to go to their own clubs.

Mr. RYRIE said these measures were not found necessary in other large Eastern cities.

JUDGE BALL said that there could be no doubt about the fact that crime had diminished in this colony.

The CHIEF JUSTICE corroborated this.

Mr. RYRIE asked whether it could not be attributed to something else than the gambling-houses.

The CHIEF JUSTICE said that the depression of trade would naturally have the effect of increasing crime. What did Mr. Ryrie allude to?

Mr. RYRIE would not pretend to find an explanation himself.

The GOVERNOR said that if anyone liked to bring forward a motion to test the opinion of the Council on this subject, he would have no objection, if it could be done consistently with the Rules which governed their proceedings as a Legislative body. The Council he was sure was not a body which would form an opinion hastily without taking trouble and ascertaining facts.

Mr. RYRIE thought there must be some other means of stopping crime; other Governments did not find it necessary to resort to this expedient.

The GOVERNOR said that the circumstances of Hongkong were altogether peculiar. We must adapt ourselves to circumstances, if we cannot bend them to our will, and most unquestionably such a policy would in Europe be wholly unjustifiable.

THE JURY ORDINANCE.

When this Ordinance was considered in committee, the Chief-Justice brought forward a new clause, the object of which was to give him power to allow juries, in all but trials for capital offenses, to retire for refreshment. We cannot pretend to report the warm legal discussion, which arose between the Chief-Justice and the Attorney-General, as to whether or not the Chief-Justice had this power in any case. The Chief-Justice was armed with books from which he quoted various cases, and Judge Ball as usual quoted various cases without being armed with the books. The Governor eventually entered into the discussion, declaring against the necessity of changing a system, which had worked perfectly well up to the present time. Judge Ball said that no difficulty had ever arisen till now. The Chief-Justice said he would carry out any law, but he had only now perceived what the existing Ordinances on this subject bound him to do. Eventually Mr. Rennie seconded the motion made by the Chief-Justice, and the Council divided, when the new clause was carried, the votes being:—

For—	Against—
Chief-Justice.	Colonial-Secretary.
Auditor-General.	Attorney-General.
Mr. Keswick.	Acting Col. Treasurer.
Mr. Ryrie.
Mr. Duncanson.

The Ordinance was then passed.

TREASON FELONY ORDINANCE.

This Ordinance was also passed after a few words of explanation from the Governor, who read a circular on the subject from the Secretary of State.

POLICE PENSIONS.

The GOVERNOR made some remarks on this Ordinance, to the same effect as those which he made on its introduction. By some oversight, police were exempted from the restrictions in respect to their pensions which operated against other members of the Civil Service. If they could struggle through their period of service without being positively dismissed, they seemed to establish an indefeasible claim to their pensions.

The Ordinance was passed after a short conversation, and the Council adjourned.

A negro alderman at New Orleans has brought an action against the convent of the Sacred Heart in that city, laying his damages at 10,000 dollars; the injury for which he claims compensation being the refusal of the superior of the convent to admit his daughter as a pupil in that establishment, where the daughters of the Louisiana aristocracy are usually educated.

THE IMPEACHMENT OF THE PRESIDENT.—The Times says that if the technical nature of the issues involved in this great trial makes it interesting to lawyers, it exhibits also the passion of the prosecutors at the bar of the Senate. The impeachment is another illustration of the jealousy of Democratic assemblies of all rivalry, and is so far a discouragement to the friends of free government. It is little consolation that the party now predominant should, as all elections shows, be losing its power over the people of the North, because all that can be hoped for by this change of sentiment is that one tyrant majority shall be succeeded by another, and perhaps a worse. The true lesson to be derived from the spectacle of American parties is different, and can only be indicated. The recklessness and violence of conduct of political affairs do not spring from too great a development of freedom, but from too little. They are ultimately due to the fact that by the imperfect electoral machinery of the States the Congress is not a council of the nation, but a delegation of a victorious party.

Police Intelligence, May 25th.

BEFORE C. MAY, ESQ.

NO PAY, NO DRINK.

Jose Dion, a seaman of the Piscataqua, was charged with refusing to pay for certain drinks at the "Old House at Home" after having drunk the same. A person from the "Old House at Home" stated that the defendant had five drinks and a bottle of beer, and having drunk the lot refused to pay the amount due.

Mr. May said that across the bar the server should hold the drink in one hand, and take the money in the other. The defendant stated that he was not the person who called the drinks. But the constable who arrested the defendant said that the man was very drunk, and struggled and attempted to commit an assault.

Mr. May therefore said that with regard to the drinks that was but a small matter, but defendant must pay one dollar for assaulting the constable.

BOATS IN SHORE.

Between fifteen and twenty unfortunates were charged with having their boats in shore before gunfire, contrary to the Ordinance.

The European constable who arrested the prisoners, stated that the U.S.S. Piscataqua fired a gun at half-past four, whereas the proper gunfire time was five o'clock. The defendants were discharged by His Worship, who remarked that it might very likely be a mistake on the part of the boatmen. After the decision of His Worship, some conversation ensued between His Worship and the Superintendent of Police, wherein the suggestion was thrown out that a gun fired from the Police Ship would perhaps be a more certain way of acquainting the boatmen with the proper time in the morning for them to approach the shore.

BRIBERY.

This morning a case came before His Worship, in which Mr. Deane appeared as prosecutor, and which is likely to throw some light upon the late rumours that have gone the round with reference to "police squeezing." On the charge-sheet, Chow-a-sai, of Endicott-lane, is accused of "offering a bribe of $40, one ham, and one box (contents unknown), to Inspector Daly, on board the John Adam" on the 23rd May, 1868. That the contents of the box should be unknown, seems strange, for on the outside there is branded the familiar "arm with hatchet," and "Jas. Hennessy, Cognac." As will be seen by the evidence, the prisoner made a deliberate attempt to bribe the Inspector, which shows that after all, the defence of the Inspector lately charged with extortion may be only too well founded.

Mr. Sharp appeared for the defendant.

Mr. Deane, acting Superintendent of Police, said about 8 p.m. on the 23rd instant he received a communication from Inspector Daly, in consequence of which he went on board the police-ship John Adam. When he arrived there he had a conversation with Inspector Daly, and sent him into the cabin in the fore part of the poop. Shortly after the Inspector went into the after-cabin, and the door being partly open, he heard a conversation going on between the Inspector and a Chinaman, with such a remarkable voice, that it was not to be mistaken. They all spoke pidgin English. In about five minutes he heard his name called by Inspector Daly, and when he went into the cabin where the Inspector was, he saw him with two or three others standing round.

Here Mr. Sharp suggested that all witnesses be put out of court.

Inspector Daly said that he had been ordered by the Chief-Justice to be in the Supreme Court when any one of his cases were going on, and further, that he might have to ask Mr. Deane some questions on the evidence.

Mr. May thought that all witnesses should go out of Court.

Mr. Deane then replied that he was only nominal prosecutor, and if the Inspector were sent out of court, he should put Inspector Daly's name on the charge sheet, and have his evidence taken first.

After some discussion, Inspector Daly retired from the Court, His Worship promising that if there was any point on which the Inspector might wish to interrogate Mr. Deane, he should do so.

Mr. Deane, further examined, stated that when he went into the cabin he saw the prisoner, who had a peculiar voice, he heard money counted up to 27. Here some words passed as to the amount of money, the Inspector, asking if fifty dollars were not the proper amount, when defendant replied that there was "one peice ham, one peice brandy, makee all same fifty dollar." After hearing the defendant, and after he had passed into another cabin, he heard Mr. Daly say, "Come in, Mr. Deane." On entering one of the cabins, he saw a pile of money, a ham, and a box, the contents of which are unknown. He caught up the dollars ($25), and took possession of them. He asked the defendant for what purpose he had brought the money, and he replied that Mr. Daly had sold him goods. Defendant did not give the name of Chow-a-sai at first, he said his name was Chow-a-chow. Defendant was under the influence of drink, but not so much but that he recognised him (witness) immediately on his entering the cabin.

By Mr. Sharp: He was standing behind the defendant for half a minute before he was recognised, and then defendant said Chin-chin, and wanted to shake hands, but he would not do so. That was before he asked what he had brought the money on board for.

Inspector Dennis Daly said on the 14th instant, about four in the afternoon, the defendant, who was known to him, came on board and asked him, "You can secure A-tai bring that cargo-boat, my can pay you fifty dollar." He replied that he could not understand his English, and that the interpreter had better be called. The interpreter on being called repeated the same words. He also ordered Sergeant Kwok-a-tai to go into the cabin, and listen to every word that passed. He did this when he went forward, leaving the defendant in the cabin. When he came back, there was defendant, A-yow, interpreter, Sergeant Kwok-a-tai and himself, in the cabin, when the proposition was made. Witness replied that as the man taken up for the velvet case had not been committed so he could not say. Next day, Saturday, the 16th inst. he reported the matter to Mr. Deane, and Mr. Tyster, the acting Registrar General. On the 22nd inst., the defendant came on board and said that he would bring a present on the following Sunday, and in accordance with this promise defendant came on board on Saturday instead, and brought with him a box and a ham, which he wanted to put in his (witness's) cabin, he objected, and sent to the Interpreter A-yow and Sergeant Kwok-a-tai. In the defendant's presence then, they, witness A-yow and A-tai put their mark on the box and ham. He then went for Mr. Deane, and when that gentleman came on board, he (witness) and defendant went into the cabin. At this time defendant was in custody and his boy had gone for security to release him. There was another Chinaman in the cabin besides himself and defendant—that was Yung-a-yune, his detective. The defendant brought out some money, and said, "I promise you fifty dollar, one ham, one case of brandy, makee all same ten dollar; forty dollar more can catchee." Defendant also said that A-tai and A-pai had sent the money, and that A-pei (the nickname of the prisoner in the velvet robbery case) had been put to $400 expense for his defence. Mr Deane came in when called, and defendant said, "How d'ye do, sir; how are ye?" in a very gruff voice, as if under the influence of drink. Defendant is always half intoxicated, and is known as the drunken compradore; nevertheless, defendant knows all the time what he is doing.

By Mr. Sharp: Defendant always asks for brandy when he meets him, and generally helps himself when he comes on board, if he (witness) is not there. Defendant had not been charged with any offence before to his knowledge. His informer A-yune, might have gone to defendant's house on Saturday, but he was not aware of it, but he did know that defendant offered to A-yune in the cabin $15, if he would come to Endicott-lane. A-yune is a paid detective, and receives $20 a month, but is not in Mr. Deane's force. He declined answering how A-yune was paid, as he did not wish it to be known how he obtained his information. When the defendant was searched, there was found two $5 notes, twenty dollars, seventy-two half-dollars, and eight shillings.

At this point the case was remanded until 10 a.m. to-morrow morning (this day).

How the Thames is Improved.

The Pall Mall Gazette says:—We lately called attention to the unfortunate dead-lock which has been brought about by the crude and short-sighted "public health legislation" of the last twenty or thirty years. In its natural haste to put an end to the acknowledged evils of the old cesspool system, Parliament has created a new and very formidable danger. The purification obtained by means of the new and costly drainage works is in many cases more apparent than real. The sewage is not disposed of, but transferred from one receptacle to another, from the cesspools to the nearest river; and the pollution of streams is in its effects on those who reside in the neighbourhood or use the water scarcely less injurious than the scattered deposits of noxious matter under the old system. In every instance in which an appeal has been made to it the Court of Chancery has forbidden the discharge of sewage into the rivers; and the result has been, as we pointed out, that the local authorities of several important towns find themselves in the awkward dilemma of having either to abandon their costly drainage works or to submit to the penalties of the Court of Chancery.

However, what we particularly wish to call attention to now is, that a special difficulty of a very serious kind has arisen in the case of London. The transfer of refuse to the Thames not only poisons the river to the annoyance of the population on its banks below the metropolis, but by the accumulations which it produces in the bed of the stream threatens to block up the port of London.

Mr. Bazalgette, the engineer to the Metropolitan Board of Works, admits that a deposit of 293,000 cubic yards, equal to about 203 acres three feet deep, has taken place in consequence of the concentration of sewage at Barking and Crossness outfalls. In mitigation of this, he pleads that there is a diminution of deposit between those points and London-bridge of 123,000 cubic yards. It is known, however, that the soundings in the centre of the river have diminished from 21 ft. to 10 ft. According to an official statement made in the House of Commons by the Vice-President of the Board of Trade, and confirmed by the Home Secretary on a subsequent occasion, the deposit at Crossness is so great that a ship has already gone aground in mid-channel. Clearly, the concentration of mud in one short reach of a river may simply stop all navigation, while the same quantity spread over fifteen miles might occasion no danger. Nor must it be forgotten that the outfalls have been in active operation for only some three years, and the low-level sewer, which will be the most foul of all, has not yet been completed. Matters must therefore get worse. It is, moreover, the essence and nature of obstructions to increase in the bed of a river. If a perpendicular wall were built across the bottom of the Thames eleven feet high (which is the depth of the mud-bank in one place) the ebb and flow of the tide would very rapidly deposit a continually elongating bank on each side of the wall. Precisely the same action is going on every day at the extremities at the present time.

Under these circumstances what is being done by the proper authorities to check the obstruction of the river? Mr. Hardy has stated in the House of Commons that the Thames Conservators had assured him that "the mass of sewage which fell into the river was such that they had no funds at their disposal to remove it, and the Metropolitan Board of Works said they had no power to remove it." Mr. Hardy informed the House that, as a means of endeavouring to put a stop to a state of things which clearly cannot be allowed to continue, he had suggested arbitration—we understand that of Sir William Earle—but that the Metropolitan Board had flatly refused to go into an arbitration; and Mr. Hardy added that "he knew no other mode by which a decision could be arrived at, except by indictment." This is really a most lamentable state of affairs. We know what has been the invariable consequence of an application to the Court of Chancery in the case of every other town in the country, and now we are actually threatened by the Home Secretary with an injunction against the Metropolitan Board of Works, restraining them from discharging their sewage into the Thames, for this can be the only meaning of an "indictment." It is the course, as we have shown, which has always been followed in other similar cases, and we presume that it is the only course which Mr. Hardy can have in view. An injunction to render useless the great main drainage system of the metropolis, on which some four millions of money have been expended, is certainly an alarming prospect, and the mere possibility, not to say probability of it, should warn Parliament of the necessity of facing this very grave and important question without delay. Parliament has got us into the difficulty, and Parliament must provide a way of escape.

Dr. Livingstone.

(From the "Times.")

The good news announced in Sir Roderick Murchison's letter yesterday will have been received with universal gratulation. We are at length assured of Dr. Livingstone's safety by the receipt of letters from Dr. Livingstone himself. The pleasure of this news is enhanced by the long anxiety we have suffered. It is now rather more than a year since we were shocked by the account of his death. The mendacious story of the Johanna men was made public at a meeting of the Geographical Society in March, 1867, and, though there has been of late good ground for hope, we have been until now without any adequate assurance of the great traveller's safety. The present news is particularly satisfactory, as it shows, not only that the story of his death was false, but that he has prosecuted his journey with considerable success. It will be remembered that he started at the mouth of the Zambesi, on the east coast of Africa. Thence he was to ascend the River Shire to the Lake Nyassa, which lies north of the Zambesi about 300 miles inland. It was on the shore of this lake that he was reported to have been murdered. The Johanna men declared that he passed northwards up the eastern side of the lake, crossed it, and fell on the western side in a combat with some savages. That this statement was at best inaccurate was proved by the search expedition sent out last year, which heard of him five days' journey beyond the place of his alleged murder, and, moreover, were assured that he had not been able to cross the lake, and had skirted its southern shores. This is now proved by his own account to have been the route he took. From the point where he was deserted we now learn he proceeded "northwards at a long distance to the west of the lake." His aim, in fact was to reach Lake Tanganyika, which lies to the north-west of Lake Nyassa, and about 650 miles inland from Zanzibar. In pursuing this route he describes himself as passing over "elevated lands, covered with humid forests, and destitute of game." In this part of his journey the party suffered much from hunger, but they nevertheless reached their immediate goal, the southern end of Lake Tanganyika. They here found abundance of cattle and food, and recovered their strength. There is a regular trading route between the eastern shore of this lake and Zanzibar, and we had recently received very encouraging information from a native who belonged to one of these caravans. This man gave a circumstantial account to Dr. Kirk at Zanzibar of having met a white man near the lake, who, by all appearances, could be no other than Livingstone. This native further stated that the white man had intrusted some letters to the leader of another caravan, named Bunduki. This very man has at length reached Zanzibar, and delivered Dr. Livingstone's letters. In addition to this, we have trustworthy information that the traveller had safely reached an important point named Ujiji, half-way up Lake Tanganyika, where provisions, stores, and letters from Zanzibar and England had long been waiting for him. He had, therefore, not only accomplished successfully this portion of his journey, but had received a material addition to his stock of necessaries.

With this information we may not only dismiss anxiety for the fate of the great Explorer, but may indulge brilliant expectations of the issue of his enterprise. It is true, indeed, that it is going somewhat beyond our evidence to assert absolutely that "Dr. Livingstone is safe;" for these letters, when they reached Zanzibar in February, were twelve months old, and many accidents may happen in the interior of Africa during that time. But we have now no more reason to be anxious for Dr. Livingstone than before we had been frightened by the lies of the Johanna men; while, on the contrary, the decided success of the Doctor up to this point is very encouraging for the future. What may have been his plans for the past twelve months we are not yet informed; but we may probably conclude that he has not struck eastward for Zanzibar, and it is possible, therefore, that he may be working up to the north of Lake Tanganyika, towards the scene of Speke's and Grant's discoveries. The lakes Victoria and Albert Nyanza are much less distant from the north of Lake Tanganyika than the latter from Lake Nyassa, and the Doctor may strike the sources of the Nile and descend the river towards Egypt. It has, indeed, been conjectured that the waters of the Tanganyika have an outlet northwards, and, if so, he would probably follow their course. The only other alternative, suggested by Sir Roderick Murchison last January, is that he may be following some great river to the West Coast. But the speculation indulged at one of the meetings of the Geographical Society does not seem very wild, that we may next hear of Dr. Livingstone at Alexandria. Should he contrive to make his way down the Nile, he will be the first man, as Dr. Kirk wrote last year, who has "not only crossed the Continent, but has passed through its whole length from the Cape of Good Hope to the mouth of the Nile." But Dr. Kirk added that the essential part of his work will have been done before he reaches the Nile; and if he were to return towards Zanzibar he would even then have earned the honour of "the greatest of all explorers, the African traveller par excellence." The accounts now actually received from him will, indeed, leave unexplored only a small portion of the whole distance between the Mediterranean and the Cape. Africa may be roughly said to extend from 30 degrees above the Equator to 30 degrees below it, or 60 degrees of latitude in all. Speke, Grant, and other travellers have penetrated from the North to below the Equator, and Livingstone has now penetrated from the South to within less than five degrees of the Equator. According to the map, there may be two and a half or three degrees out of the whole 60 as yet untraversed. Even if nothing should result from the labour of these pioneers, the mere discovery will still be a wonderful achievement. England will always be proud of her African explorers, and among those distinguished names there will not be one more honoured and cherished than Dr. Livingstone.

There remain two feelings to which we must give expression in reviewing this eventful story. One is of indignation at those rascally Johanna men whose deliberate lies have occasioned all this anxiety during the past year. There can now be no doubt that those men deserted Dr. Livingstone, and, taking for granted that he would come to harm in the interior, ventured to fabricate the story of his destruction. In addition to the anxiety and pain they have occasioned, they have put the country to the trouble of a search expedition; and, besides the expenditure of money, valuable lives have been hazarded in order to disprove their falsehoods. The last we heard of them was that they had had the impudence to send to Zanzibar to demand their wages. Sir Samuel Baker recently expressed a regret that, while Africa was so rich in specimens of the feline tribe, it should be destitute of a cat-o'-nine-tails. We suppose it is impossible to punish these rascals, but we trust they have not received a farthing of money. The other feeling we must entertain is one of gratitude to Sir Roderick Murchison, who has maintained throughout, with a tenacity which some people called obstinacy, a belief in Dr. Livingstone's safety. Perhaps his own energy inspired him unconsciously with a conviction that Dr. Livingstone, like himself, would not be overcome by any ordinary obstacles; but, at all events, his acuteness and his firmness have rendered a most valuable service both to the public and to Dr. Livingstone's friends. As recently as January, so great an authority as Sir Samuel Baker spoke of "hoping almost against hope" for the traveller's safety, and observed that though we had heard a good deal of him we had heard nothing from him. Sir Roderick Murchison, however, with singular sagacity, has from first to last held to a conviction that Dr. Livingstone was safe. He is now abundantly rewarded by the receipt of these despatches from his friend; but the public would be ungrateful if they did not express a warm sense of the obligation under which he has laid them.

The Future of the Jews of Europe.

The Jews have survived the Pharaohs, as Mr. Disraeli has told us; and the Assyrian, and the Flavii, and the Barbarians; and will survive, we daresay, the Papacy, of which they are fast becoming the most dangerous foes; but will they survive prosperity? It is a very wonderful account of fortitude under suffering, of strength increased by persecution, of great qualities developed by injustice, which Mr. Cracroft has recorded in the paper on "The Jews of Western Europe," which he has inserted among those powerful though unequal criticisms of his which he has just reproduced in a book; but on the day it reaches us there reaches us also a New York Tribune of the 10th March. That paper, notable among American papers for always containing something other papers omit, devotes half a column to a very eulogistic account, by no means so bad in point of style as such things usually are, of "the Masked Ball of Purim." Imagine the masked ball of Purim! The Jews of New York, it seems, prosperous, contented, and entirely free from social oppression, are in the habit of celebrating one of the greatest of their festivals publicly, have this year asked all New York to a Carnival, and in an extemporized hall of white and gold, fitted up with the Oriental magnificence of taste which, after two thousand years of exile, lingers in their bones, have given an entertainment which seems to have convinced their American friends that the art of reception was one of the things they did understand "down in Judee." The reporter is once or twice so carried away that he loses himself and becomes almost natural, and there seems no doubt that in royal extravagance of luxury, dominated by true though florid and semi-Asiatic sense of the beautiful, New York felt itself for once hopelessly outdone. The affair looks well even in print, as those affairs seldom look; but what a strange juxtaposition of ideas!—the festival of Purim celebrated by a masked ball, Vashti suggested by the beauty of an American merchant's daughter, Esther dressed as a Parisienne under Louis Quatorze, Mordecai in "pants" and a collar, that wild Assyrian incident, the most truly Oriental story ever told, except the infinitely higher idyl of Ruth, commemorated on a continent of which St. Paul never heard, and amid a great people devoted to the Master who overthrew Judaism, by a masked ball! It is 2,373 years that ceremonial has survived; it is 500 years older than Christianity, and in the newest capital of earth, amidst the newest of conquering nations, it ends in a masquerade. A volume might be written on an occurrence so bizarre, so ironical, so utterly at variance with every fixed idea, historical or theological, in one's head; but our special point is the inquiry whether the incident is not significant, whether Judaism, which has survived all foes, will survive all friends; whether the race which defied equally the Caesars and the Inquisition will defy its steadily warm welcome and thorough emancipation? This is clearly the new test to which the nation is to be subjected.—Spectator.

A NEW DAINTY.—Somebody has found out that the liver of the hare is a delicacy as capable of improvement as the liver of the goose. We have only to catch our hare, shut him up, feed him well, and save him from dying of congestion of the spleen by administering a smart blow just behind the ears, and then we may snap our fingers at Strasbourg. We are surprised that this gastronomic discovery was not made long ago. The stuffing of roast hare is indebted for its flavour chiefly to the chopped liver, which is mixed with the other ingredients; and when one comes to think of it, with the concentration of mind that such a subject demands, there really is a resemblance in the taste of the two things—hare-stuffing and foie gras. If, now, we could only hit upon a cheap and efficient substitute for truffles! Amateur cooks would then be in excelsis, and make-believe goose liver, independent of Perigord for the proper seasoning, would find a place on every breakfast-table. Seriously, there is no room for reasonable doubt that hare's liver is, for the purpose of pâté, as good as the liver of goose, if not better; and the original genius who has called attention to the fact deserves the gratitude of gourmets with limited incomes.—Daily Telegraph.

CHAMPAGNE FROM PETROLEUM.—It is no longer a secret of the chemist's laboratory that clear golden syrups can be made from starch and sulphuric acid; that delicious wines and brandies can be made from beetroot; that a barrel of peanuts can be transformed into excellent coffee; that lard can absorb an enormous quantity of water in certain conditions; that, in fact, there seems no limit to the adulterations that an intelligent and dishonest chemist can practice upon his fellow men. All these marvels of chemical science have in these latter days become degraded into mere tricks of trade, and their chief beauty is in their capacity to enable unscrupulous dealers to lighten the pockets and destroy the stomachs of the confiding and consuming public. Concerning the article of champagne, a writer in the Cincinnati Journal of Commerce tells us that it is made from a thousand different substances—even from refined petroleum. Yes, from the fiery benzole a sparkling, bubbling, foaming champagne can be produced which will delight the eye, tickle the palate, gladden the heart momentarily—but quicken our paces toward the graveyard. This is a new use for petroleum, which those who have been experimenting with it as an agency for generating steam have little dreamed of. Who can say that the Pennsylvania oil territory, now considered mostly worthless, may not some day be regenerated into the great champagne-producing country of the world?—British Medical Journal.

Docks.

THE UNION DOCK COMPANY OF HONGKONG AND WHAMPOA, LIMITED.

THE Company respectfully beg to call the attention of Ship Owners, Consignees, and Masters of Vessels to their establishments at WHAMPOA and HONGKONG, which offer every facility for the DOCKING and REPAIRS of Vessels of all classes.
Their Docks at Whampoa are in good working order, and are pumped out by Steam, and the Workshops comprise the different departments of Shipwright, Blacksmith, Boilermaker, and Machinery works. Materials supplied of the best kind and on the most reasonable terms. A jetty with a pair of powerful lifting shears, alongside of which masts and boilers can be taken out of Vessels.
Their Hongkong establishment (lately known as Messrs. THOS. HUNT & Co.'s Wanchai Shipyard), comprises also the different departments of Shipwright, Blacksmith, Boilermaker and Machinery works, and possesses a pair of lifting shears.
Their Granite Dock at Kowloon, most advantageously situated, solidly built, and of full dimensions to admit the docking of any Vessel coming to this harbour, will be completed in a very short time.
The Steam Tug Little Orphan is always in readiness to tow Vessels to Dock, free of charge, and to sea, or new berth, at reduced rates.
All works carried on under the superintendence of experienced European foremen.
For further particulars apply to
A. D. MITCHELL,
Manager of Works,
At the Office of the Company.
N.B.—Consignees or Masters of Vessels having cause to complain of the works done at the Docks or at Hongkong, will please address their complaints to the Office of the Company, which will receive the immediate attention of the Directors.
tf 809 Hongkong, 29th April, 1868.

NOTICE.
THE Undersigned call the attention of Masters and Agents of vessels discharging at this port to the great advantage to be gained in point of convenience, despatch, and economy, by making use of their Wharves at New Harbour.
With the assistance of steam cranes, a general cargo can be landed easily in a few days—or in about one-fifth of the time usually occupied discharging in the roads.
There are large, dry, and very commodious brick godowns on the wharves, which vessels have free use of for cargo while discharging.
The trouble and disputes with, and pilfering of cargo common among boatmen, are avoided by vessels using the wharves.
Cartage of cargo to the town (which is within easy distance) is guaranteed to be not more than lighterage from the roads, and the coolie hire discharging alongside is less.
There is always a large stock of the best English and Welsh coals on the premises, which are supplied to steamers at the lowest market price, and vessels going alongside to take in or discharge coals pay no wharfage.
Vessels discharging cargo pay a wharfage of 20 cents per ton—a trifling charge when the immense advantages gained are taken into consideration.
Arrangements have been made by which all repairs to ships or steamers can be done with despatch while the vessels are lying alongside the wharves.
There is an efficient European pilot on the premises, and when required, a steam tug is always available.

Postmaster General.
General Post-Office,
Hongkong, 15th May, 1868.

It is hereby notified for general information that henceforward Book Packets and Packets of Samples or Patterns may be transmitted by the Post in the Mails by the British Contract Packets between Hongkong, Shanghai, Yokohama, and Nagasaki, at the following rates, viz.—

FOR A BOOK PACKET OR A PACKET OF PATTERNS.

Under 4 oz.	Above 4 oz. and not exceeding 8 oz.	Above 8 oz. and not exceeding 12 oz.	Above 12 oz. and not exceeding 16 oz.	For every additional 4 oz.
Cents. 6	Cents. 12	Cents. 18	Cents. 24	Cents. 6

The Postage must in all cases be paid in advance.
Special attention is directed to the following Rules and Regulations, which will be strictly enforced:—

AS REGARDS BOOKS.
A Book Packet may contain any number of separate Books, Almanacks, Maps, or Prints, and any quantity of paper, vellum or parchment (to the exclusion of letters whether sealed or open); and the Books, Maps, Paper, &c., may be either printed, written, or plain, or any mixture of the three.
All legitimate binding, mounting, or covering of the same or of a portion thereof, will be allowed, whether such binding be loose or attached; as also rollers in the case of prints, markers (whether of paper or otherwise) in the case of books, and, in short whatever is necessary for the safe transmission of literary or artistic matter or usually appertains thereto.
Every book packet must be either without a cover, or in a cover open at the ends or sides. It must not contain any letter, open or sealed, nor any sealed enclosure whatever.

AS REGARDS PATTERNS.
They must not be of intrinsic value. That rule excludes all articles of a saleable nature, and indeed, whatever may have a value of its own, apart from its mere use as a pattern; and the quantity of any material sent ostensibly as a pattern must not be so great that it can fairly be considered as having on this ground an intrinsic value.
The rule which forbids the transmission through the Post of any article likely to injure the contents of the Mail Bags or Boxes, or the person of any Officer of the Post Office is of course, applicable to the Pattern Post; and a packet containing anything of the kind will be stopped, and not sent to its destination. Articles such as the following have been occasionally posted as Patterns, and have been detained as unfit for the Post, viz.: Metal boxes, porcelain and China fruit, vegetables, bunches of flowers, cuttings of plants, spurs, knives, scissors, needles, pins, pieces of machinery, sharp pointed instruments, samples of metals, samples in glass bottles, pieces of glass, acids of various kinds, curry combs, copper and steel engraving, plates and confectionery of all kinds.
The Packets or the contents thereof must not contain any inclosure, sealed or otherwise closed against inspection.
The decision of the Postmaster General as to the eligibility of any Packet, pattern, or sample contained therein, to be forwarded under these regulations, will be final and conclusive.

Extracts.

The Empire of Russia.

(From the "Times.")

The Empire of Russia is just now passing through one of those revolutions of opinion which determine the progress of nations. We are not speaking this time of the foreign policy of the Monarchy. It is not a question of the "acquisition of Russia," or the advance of Russia in the East, or her designs upon Central Asia, or any other such demonstrations on the path of conquest. It is a home question exclusively, and one which, though it undoubtedly interests ourselves and other people of Europe, concerns the Russians most of all. Briefly, the controversy is between Free Trade and Protection. That conflict of views which, sooner or later, arises in every State, according to its enlightenment, has arisen in Russia. The most discerning statesmen of the Empire have long felt the necessity of revising its tariff, and except for a peculiar and unexpected opposition, their opinions would, in all probability, have before now prevailed. Most readers will be aware that the accession of the present Emperor to the Throne was signalised by the adoption of what, under the circumstances, may be termed a truly liberal policy. The emancipation of the serfs was of itself enough to characterize the new era, but besides that great measure many other reforms were gradually introduced, by which the institutions of the country were more or less assimilated to those of Western Europe. In the track of the wholesome innovations it is probable that Free Trade would have soon followed, when the rising spirit was suddenly checked by a singular burst of popular feeling.

The Crimean War had left Russia enfeebled but not dismayed, and it can be readily imagined that a struggle distinguished by so many acts of heroism had acted powerfully upon the patriotism of the nation. This spirit became plainly visible during the last abortive insurrection of the Poles. England and France, as will be remembered, ventured upon some mediation in the question; but the Russian Government replied to the overture by a manifesto claiming for the whole Empire an invincible determination to maintain its rights and its power. How this not unnatural ebullition of sentiment could be connected with the revision of the tariff it may perplex the reader to imagine, but such was the case. Patriotism, or "nationality," became a popular cry, and the spirit which had been evoked in behalf of Imperial pretensions was transferred into a struggle for manufacturing monopolies. Moscow was a centre of industrial enterprise as well as of aristocratic opinion, and "nationality" in industrial as well as political institutions became a watchword of the old Muscovite party. The sticklers for the traditional policy of Russia were at the same time the protectors of Russian manufactures. Nobles and millowners joined together to keep Russia as she was. Russians were to be as they had always been—independent, self-supporting, free from foreign influence, and at liberty to accomplish their own destinies in their own way. This curious identification of political and commercial traditions has actually enabled a comparatively small party to offer a successful resistance to Free Trade. A Commission which sate upon the question not long ago confined its suggestions of financial reform within very narrow limits, and it is now thought doubtful whether a new Commission may not undo some of the little which had been done. "Russia for the Russians, and Russia for herself," are the cries which have prevailed against the interests of seventy millions of consumers. The question is still alive, but we fear we cannot say that the prospect is bright.

It is singular that Russia and the United States—at the two opposite poles of political organization—should display so many points of resemblance in national policy. The old exclusive traditions of the Muscovite party are very like the principles professed by the "Know Nothings" in America just before the Civil War. As far as the spirit is genuine or unselfish, it proceeds upon the assumption that isolation, as far as it can be practised, is for the benefit of a nation. Of course, neither the Russians nor the Americans, in so far as they profess to be people with "destinies," can shut themselves up like the Japanese; but though they have no objection to growth, they wish to grow as they are, and without any recognition of the mutual dependence of nations. We must do the Russians the justice to say that they impute no selfishness to ourselves. They do not pretend to believe that we are the advocates of Free Trade principles solely because such principles redound to our commercial profit. They see that we prosper, and, so far as our example goes, they see that Free Trade is good; but they do not choose to have it for themselves, and this resolution, which expresses with a certain party a mistaken idea of nationality, is, naturally enough, adopted by manufacturers who are simply desirous of escaping from the pressure of competition. Between them, these two classes are likely apparently to have their way.

We do not profess to feel any absorbing concern in the immediate issue of this controversy. The Russian Protectionists are right in supposing that our material interests will not be deeply affected by the pending decision. But it is for the advantage of all that a country like Russia should adopt the policy most beneficial not only to other countries, but to its own vast population. The principle of Free Trade is, not that any people should forego the pursuit of national wealth by works of industry, but that they should adopt those industries which nature recommends. We should like to see the exports no less than the imports of Russia increased; but there is no more reason, as far as nationality is concerned, why Russia should manufacture her own cotton stuffs than why she should make her own champagne. True patriotism would consist, not in forcing artificial, but in encouraging natural production. The Russians have special facilities for many industries, and if they would promote and develope them could well afford to leave other trades to other people. After the close of the Civil War in the United States a prominent American declared that the country could not be considered prosperous until South Carolina produced her own stuffs as successfully as her own cotton, and he asked why the raw material should be transported all the way to England and back again, instead of being manufactured on the spot, as the very nature of things suggested. The answer to this was plain—that the "nature of things" told exactly the other way. Cotton was sent from Charleston to Lancashire for the work of the mill because that work was done so well in Lancashire that, after all the cost of transport, the manufactured article could be imported into America more cheaply than it could have been made there. The result proved that we enjoyed one gift and the Americans another, and that true "patriotism" consisted on both sides in an interchange of national advantages.

The Russians might apply the moral to their own case, but we may also add, in conclusion, that we have, in one respect, a kind of direct concern in the commercial policy which they may please to adopt. The revision of the Imperial tariff is very closely connected with the prosperity of the Imperial finances, and Russia is so frequently a borrower that her finances cannot be a subject of indifference to Europe. The higher Russia credit stands, the better is it for Russian creditors as well as for Russia itself, and nothing would so tend to confirm this credit as a tariff more in accordance with the commercial principles now recognized in Western Europe. To this extent the question may be said to interest us, but that interest, the Russians may assure themselves, is second to the concern we feel in the adoption of a wise policy by so great and populous a nation.

A Tragedy.

A horrible tragedy is reported from the Isle of Man, where three children have been thrown into a well and killed by their father, who afterwards jumped in himself. There seems little doubt that the man was insane, and at the inquest a verdict that he had committed the act when of unsound mind was returned. He seems to have been in tolerably good circumstances, but had been for some days labouring under a groundless fear of the loss of employment. On the 3rd inst. he remained at home for the purpose of attending the funeral of a nephew, and about half-past eleven that day he took three of his children down to see the corpse. Upon his return home he seemed greatly depressed, and his wife became very much alarmed. She sent up to the fields for a man named Shimin, despatching Emily, her second child, with the message. After she had gone the husband went out to a well which stood opposite the door of his cottage, and begun to play with the bucket and winch. This well was a draw well, some twenty feet in depth, and containing eight feet of water. He returned to the house and went out again, three of his children at the time playing in yard. His wife, who had taken the youngest child, an infant of three months old, out of the cradle, was in the house, when she suddenly heard one of the children cry out, "Oh, dadda!" Rushing out, still with the infant in her arms, the wife was horrified to find that her husband had thrown two of his children into the well, and was about throwing the third. She seized hold of him, but too late to arrest his purpose. He then turned to her, and said, "We are all to go together," and endeavoured to take the infant out of her arms. A struggle ensued, but it was short. He took the child from her, and threw it into the well also. He then seized his wife, but she succeeded in getting away from him, and ran to a neighbouring house for protection. The child who had been sent for assistance now come up, and he threw her down the well and plunged in after her. The bodies were soon recovered, chiefly by the gallantry of the man Shimin, who descended into the well at the risk of his life. Only the child who was last thrown in survived; the other three, with their father were brought up dead. The ages of the deceased children were seven years, four years, and three months.

The Lancet asserts that the Mauritius will require the outlay of a very large sum in works of public drainage before it can be made habitable to Europeans, and calls for a commission of inquiry on the subject.

REDUCTION

In the rates of premium for

FIRE INSURANCE.

THE Undersigned have (as already intimated in their Circular dated 14th October last) received authority from the Secretary of the Royal Insurance Company to reduce the rate of Premium under certain circumstances, on private residences and on Furniture and effects therein contained.

In cases of Dwelling Houses removed from the town the rate of premium will be three-quarters per cent. in place of one per cent. per annum as hitherto charged, and in cases of Residences so situated being detached or semi-detached the rate will be further reduced to one-half per cent.

The Royal's annual rates for Fire Insurance on the various classes of Buildings and their contents will therefore remain as follows until further notice, viz:—

Detached and semi-detached Dwelling Houses (removed from the town) and their contents.	½ per cent.
Other Dwelling Houses (similarly situated) and their contents	¾ per cent.
Offices and Godowns and their contents.	1 per cent.
